

La Jetée

They invite him into their world. But he asked for some wave of time washes over him, the result of another inaction perhaps. This time she is asleep in the sun. He thinks that, in the time it has taken him to return to her world, she may have died. She awakens, and again he talks to her. The truth being too fantastic to believe, he tells only the essentials--a distant country, a long jourture was better protected than the past. After more exhausting efforts, he made contact with the world of the future--a world transformed; Paris rebuilt; then thousand unknown avenues. Other men awaited him.

Clearly they rejected his leftovers from another age. He recited his lesson: since mankind had survived, surely it could

An-

She well- comes him happily. She calls him One so